Subject: 331-A lab demolition

---

Mike-

I was shown an ad in the Tri-City Herald that requests input from the public for the demolition of the 331-A building. I was very surprised to see the ad for several reasons. The building is already partially demo'ed and apparently does not promote any future use for PNNL. What difference does it make to the public if it is torn down? There are several buildings around Hanford that have been or need to be torn down. Is the EPA going to request public input about each of these buildings? I am also very curious about where you got your information about contamination levels and locations within this building, especially since the information in the paper is not 100% accurate. Thank you for your time-
